This house hints at the Dutch Colonial style. There are four gambrel roof ends, one facing each side, and they are sided with shingles that flare slightly over the first floor. A porch with square columns covers the north side of the front façade, and next to it is a bay window. The second floor of the house is accentuated by careful subtleties in the shingle siding, including a slight slope out to meet the molding of the pair of windows on the second floor of the façade, and a small "eyelid" flare with a serrated pattern over a window on the north side of the house.

Mrs. Virginia Hoopes and her son, Marshall F., lived here in 1899, and stayed until at least 1902. In 1908, John E. Wirkler, a tutor in history, lived in the house along with his wife Virginia. In 1910, he shared the house with F. D. Tubbs. W. L. Gaston lived here in 1916. Chester H. Yeaton, a mathematics professor at the College, and his wife, E. K. Yeaton, a philosophy professor, lived here from 1927 through 1929 (Yearbooks, City Directories). R. C. Oltman lived here from 1933 through 1936. Hershey G. Shannon moved in around 1937 and stayed until at least 1956, an E. K. Yeaton, a philosophy professor, lived here from 1927 through 1929 (Yearbooks, City Directories). R. C.
