Further Description of Important Interior and Exterior Features

This house has a recessed porch on the southeast corner. There are two doors into the house on this porch: the left door opens to a staircase that leads to the upstairs apartment, and the right door opens into the downstairs apartment. The porch’s railing with turned wood spindles was added in 2001. To the right of this porch is a large bay window. On the top story, a gable-roofed wall dormer faces the road. The house has a flared beltcourse. On the south side is another wall dormer, and a door that leads to the basement. An addition was added to the back of the house: it is one story and has a shed roof.

Description of Environment and Outbuildings (see #52)

This home is on a main access route to the town center and sits on a relatively small lot. A walkway leads from the sidewalk to the front porch, passing under a tree. There is a driveway on the south side of the house, which leads to a parking lot in the back.

42. Further Description of Important Interior and Exterior Features (Continued from page 1)

By 1899, Phila P. Bissell was living there; she stayed until the 1910s, when Paul Wainwright lived in the house. In the 1920s, Miss May E. Day moved in, and she stayed until 1938. After that, Donald W. Bryant, a custodian at the High School, lived in the house, with a variety of housemates.
