A one story commercial building with a colored slate tile roof and a central roof dormer. Central recessed entryway has simple fluted pilasters and is flanked by two large glass storefront windows. A large sign extends along the entire facade above the door and windows.

In 1939 George Bailey purchased two small buildings on the site, demolished them, and erected the current structure. Businesses have included a drug store, a gift shop, a used book store, today it is an artist studio and sales gallery. The first buildings on the site were built prior to 1855 and were destroyed in the fire of 1871. The next building on the site was completed by 1889. All buildings at this location have been single story structures. Until 1939 there was an alley on the north side of this lot. The builders daughter, (cont.)

This structure is centrally located in the South Main Street commercial district.
