This one and a half story vernacular home contains several Italianate and gingerbread elements. The gabled roof house is fashioned as a side hallway as the house can be entered from a door located on the left side. A projecting cornice supported by brackets creates a hood over the door that contains decorative dentils. Two one-over-one double hung windows are located to the right of the door. Above the center window, two windows are located side by side continued...

side that are curved at the top, typical of the Italianate style. The one-over-one double hung windows retain a decorative gingerbread-like pediment above them. More ornamentation can be found underneath the gable. A bay on the south side projects outward so that it is set back from the front facade, where another screen door is located. No steps lead up to the door unlike the front door that has three stones steps. The bay extends out in the west direction as well. The south elevation contains about four windows. Four windows are situated on the main body of the north elevation. The windows on bottom are one-over-one double hung and the windows on top are either awning or hopper and are located directly under the roofline. Also one window and a door are positioned on the gabled one-story rear section. According to the Lorain County Auditor's property card, the house also contains a full crawl space.
